

COMING TOGETHER AROUND VETERAN FAMILIES : TM

SUPPORTING OUR BABIES AND TODDLERS

STRESS AND BEHAVIOR

“You’re not alone,
I feel stressed too!”

Babies and toddlers do pick up on stress in the home and often act out what they are unable to put into words.

Developed by
ZERO
TO THREE[®]
National Center for Infants,
Toddlers, and Families
Copyright 2013 © ZERO TO THREE
ISBN 978-1-938558-13-9

ZERO TO THREE gratefully acknowledges the McCormick Foundation for its continued support on behalf of military and Veteran families.

ROBERT R.
McCORMICK
FOUNDATION

Robert R. McCormick Foundation Investing in Early Education since 1993

1255 23rd Street, NW Suite 350 Washington, DC 20037

www.zerotothree.org/military

CONTACT:

COMING TOGETHER AROUND VETERAN FAMILIES : TM

SUPPORTING OUR BABIES AND TODDLERS STRESS AND BEHAVIOR

During stressful times, try not to forget that your child, as little as he is, is affected by the feelings of others close to him. If his behavior becomes more challenging, remember that this might be his only way of telling you that he is stressed too!

- Learn to be a “Feelings Detective.” Babies or toddlers may communicate their stress through increased aggression, regression (a return to more “babyish” behaviors such as night awakening, wanting to be held all the time, or losing interest in the potty—depending on his age), sleep changes, whining/crying, and/or clinginess. Rather than getting mad, try to figure out what your child is trying to tell you about how he is feeling. Often these behaviors are a sign of needing more reassurance. Then you can figure out how to support him through this rough time as best you can. Don’t hesitate to talk to your pediatrician or a counselor if you have concerns about your child’s behavior.
- Reassure your child, through words, gestures, and comforting activities that he will continue to be loved and nurtured no matter how he is behaving or what is happening around him.
- Babies and toddlers pick up on the stress of their caregivers. When you feel sad and scared, they do too. It’s a tall order, but try to be aware of your own behavior and responses during stressful times. This will help you manage your feelings and actions in ways that can reduce the stress on both you and your child. Maintaining consistent, familiar routines is one way of buffering your child during stressful situations.

Photo credit: Kiwi Street Studios

Developed by

National Center for Infants, Toddlers, and Families

ROBERT R.
McCORMICK
FOUNDATION

Robert R. McCormick Foundation Investing in Early Education since 1993